

AITA Tennis 10s and Under Competition

Tennis 10s revolution is growing throughout the world. It was introduced by International Tennis Federation (ITF) in 2012. The ITF recommended that players aged 10 and under do not train or play competition with a regular yellow ball on a full court, but instead train and compete with a red, orange or green ball on the appropriate sized court according to the size of the children. The ITF's global campaign is aimed at increasing tennis participation worldwide by positioning the game as easy, fun and healthy. Fundamental to the campaign is the use of slower balls so that the first experience for starter players is a positive and dynamic one.

It is playing a major role in tennis development in different parts of the world in the form of progressive stages because introducing tennis to young starter players in the right way is critical. This has enabled coaches to introduce tennis to youngsters using game based approach/ learning through play philosophy in a systematic manner providing fun, success and safe environment from the first time the starter player play. It has various advantages over real tennis:

- Low compression balls: Red, Orange or Green ball is 75, 50 and 25% slower than a yellow ball respectively. This will help players develop the most efficient technique as well as implement advanced tactics at a young age.
- Court Size: Court size can be different according to the size of the children and ball being used. For 10 and under the matches are played on normal size court. This will help players develop and improve all aspects of their game.

- Racquet Size: A bigger racquet of 25"-26" is recommended but not compulsory. This gives a chance to the young players to learn at their own pace developing skills and helping them to play sooner as well as play with their friends.

Now the difference is that all the elements have been brought together in a more systematic manner than ever before allowing children to learn quickly and play successfully. Progressive tennis is a developmental tool allowing young children to improve their overall tennis skills faster so that they can transition to the regular court with more ease. This offers an enjoyable and realistic playing experience for children.

Parents Role

The parents' role is more important in Tennis10s than at any other stage of tennis because children are very influenced by the behaviour of their parents at this age. Please follow the link <http://www.tennisplayandstay.com/tennis10s/guide-for-parents.aspx> for more information.

AITA Aim/ Goal

AITA is coming up with competition for children aged between 7 to 10 from 2013 onward. This will not only promote greater participation of youngsters in the game but will also provide an opportunity to develop a better standard of players. This will improve the future growth of our sport as well as lay a strong foundation for the new generation of professional players. Appropriate competition is very important to have fun and stimulating for young starter players.

Views from ITF and former top players

Francesco Ricci Bitti, ITF President: This is a great step forward for tennis improving the way we introduce tennis to young players.

Andre Agassi, eight-time Grand Slam Singles Champion: This gives children the opportunity to experience authentic court movement, swing patterns and game strategy. It is real tennis and a step in the right direction to getting more young kids involved in the game that I love.

Stafanie Graf, 22-time Grand Slam Singles Champion and Olympic Gold medal winner: As a mother and life-long tennis player, I fully understand the importance of ensuring that kids properly learn the game of tennis at their own pace while also having fun doing it. Anytime kids can get a true feel for the game, it is best.
